Woman charged in fatal beating of her husband

Child 'traumatized.'
Wife had previously been jailed for assault causing bodily harm

ANNALISE KLINGBEIL
annalise.klingbeil@metronews.ca

A 52-year-old woman who spent time in jail for assault in 2008 has been charged with second-degree murder after her husband died early Monday morning in what Edmonton police are calling "a classic case of domestic violence."

Autopsy results have revealed Teck Hwang, 56, died of blunt drastic trauma, a term the city's homicide staff sergeant has never encountered in his many years with the force.

The home where Teck Hwang was allegedly beaten. METRO

"It was described by the medical examiner as a very severe beating-type injuries," EPS Homicide Staff Sgt. Bill Clark said Tuesday.

Clark said there are indications an object was used in the fatal beating but would not elaborate because the matter is before the courts.

Police were initially contacted by EMS around 10 p.m. on Sunday, after the victim was found suffering cardiac arrest in his Belle Rive home and rushed to hospital.

Clark said it was the accused who called 911, and a 16-year-old boy, the couple's only child, was in the house when officers arrived.

The boy is staying with friends and is "obviously very traumatized," Clark said. "One parent has died and the other one is now in jail."

The victim stopped breathing several times in hospital but was revived by staff before succumbing to his injuries early Monday morning.

Nyuk Hwang, the victim's wife, has been charged with second-degree murder. Court documents show in 2008 she was charged with assault causing bodily harm and sentenced to three weeks in jail and two years of probation.

Alta. to get hotter, drier: Report

A new report says Alberta's future climate will be hotter and drier.

The Alberta Biodiversity Monitoring Institute says that over the coming decades, grasslands will take over forests and forests will take over wetlands as all the province's ecological regions shift north.

Temperatures will average between two and four degrees warmer, which means that heavier rain and snowfall will simply evaporate away.

Report author Rick Schneider says even though the effects of climate change won't show up for years to come, Albertans need to start planning now.

The institute is an arm's-length scientific agency funded by government, industry and levies on industrial carbon emissions.

More than 5M hours of work lost due to floods

Statistics Canada says the extensive flooding that hit Alberta in June produced a net loss of 5.1 million hours of work.

The agency says 300,000 employed Albertans, or 13.5 per cent of the total working population, lost 7.5 million hours of work during the floods. At the same time, 134,000 people, or six per cent of workers, put in 2.4 million additional hours.

There was a net loss in hours worked in all industries, except utilities and public administration.

Forum. Councillors vying for mayor's seat discuss growth issues with industry

RYAN TUMILTY

Urban sprawl, annexation and development charges were front and centre Tuesday night, as the three main candidates for mayor squared off in a development industry-sponsored forum.

The Urban Development Institute and the Canadian Home Builders' Association put on the event for their members with questions focused on their issues. It's the first mayoral debate held this election year.

Coun. Don Iveson said he believed the city was moving in the right direction and he wanted to make sure it stayed that way.

"We are on track to be the kind of globally relevant city that we all know we can be," he said.

Coun. Karen Leibovici said she believed Edmonton was growing in a responsible way and would continue to lead the country.

"I don't believe we are an example of urban sprawl. We are an example of responsible

In addition to forums for every council ward, the city has three mayoral forums planned for Oct. 1, 7 and 10.

urban growth," she said.

Coun. Kerry Diotte pushed his message of a city that would focus on core services, keeping taxes and development costs low and encouraging people to invest in the city.

"For the most part I think government should be as small as possible and focused strictly on the core services," said Diotte.

All of the candidates agreed that the city needed to do more to keep development costs low, with Leibovici promising a red-tape elimination committee.

Iveson said the key was an online planning process to keep the process open.

"A lot of this will get easier because everyone will be able to hold each other accountable," he said.

Iveson and Leibovici endorsed the city's proposed annexation plan, but Diotte said he didn't think the city need to be so heavy-handed.

"I think there are better solutions than being pirates and just taking the land. I think we need to get back to the table."

Domestic violence 'usually ... the other way around'

An unusual case.

Wife allegedly beating husband to death shows anyone can be a victim of abuse, notes cop

annalise.klingbeil@metronews.ca

Staff Sgt. Bill Clark said the severe and fatal beating of a 56-year-old man allegedly at the hands of his wife shows there are "cases out there of horrific domestic violence, and it's something the community needs to be aware of."

On Tuesday, 52-year-old Nyuk Hwang was charged with second-degree murder in connection with the death of her husband, Teck Hwang, who died in hospital on Monday.

"It's a wife in the case beating on the husband. Usually it's the other way around," Clark said.

The incident is Edmonton's 17th homicide of 2013 and the second alleged spousal homicide this year.

Jimmy Rivas-Magana was charged with second-degree murder in the stabbing death of his new wife, Yeny Alfaro, in July.

Clark said domestic violence in Edmonton is increasing. During the first six months of 2013, officers saw a 17-per-cent increase in domestic violence compared with the same time period last year.

Police Chief Rod Knecht spoke about the problem of domestic violence during an informal chat with media last week and noted the force will be focusing on the issue in the coming months.

"We largely react to these crimes. They happen behind closed doors; they happen out of the view of the public. But we know family members, neighbours, others are aware of these crimes, and they're not being reported," Knecht said.

Researchers are partnering with the police force on a project that will start in September, examining why domestic abuse is on the rise.

"I don't think any particular group escapes domestic violence, quite frankly," Knecht said.

In the case of the Hwangs, Clark said the family had "some history" with police. Court documents show Nyuk Hwang served time in jail for assault causing bodily harm.

Taxpayers Association. Drastic cuts needed to pay for flood

The Canadian Taxpayers Association says the Alberta government should take drastic action to help pay for billions of dollars in flood damage in the province this year.

The association released a report Tuesday estimating that the unexpected cost of June's flooding will push the province's consolidated deficit up by $3 billion in 2013-14 and by an additional $2 billion in each of the following two years.

Alberta director Derek Fildebrandt says the province should divert $4.4 billion in annual spending away from pre-flood commitments and put it toward rebuilding as part of an "emergency fiscal program."

"That would mean bringing government workers' salaries and pensions and benefits into line with norms for equivalent jobs in the private sector," said Fildebrandt, adding that government employees generally are paid six-to-10 per cent more than those in the private sector, so rolling back their compensation would yield substantial savings.

An official with the Alberta Union of Provincial Employees, which represents provincial government workers, was critical of the report.

"I really think it's in bad taste that they would try to capitalize on a natural disaster," said spokesman Mark Wells. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Drainage upgrades need $150M to $200M: Report

Major floods. Southeast residents tired of being underwater

ryan.tumilty@metronews.ca

Kathy Brower is worried about her daughter's wedding next July, but not for any of the usual reasons.

The southeast resident has seen flooding in her basement during heavy summer storms before, and she doesn't like being away from home in July.

"I can't leave a wedding to try and save things out of my flooded house," she said.

Improving drainage in southeast neighbourhoods could cost $150 million to $200 million, says a report that city councillors reviewed on Tuesday.

Since a flood last year did serious damage to her house, Brower said the city has been doing a good job of keeping residents informed, but now they want action.

She said some residents have lost their home insurance, which makes their houses nearly impossible to sell.

"If we can't ever sell our homes, that is like lighting $300,000, $400,000 or $500,000 on fire," she said.

Coun. Amarjeet Sohi said the city has to find ways to push ahead with planned sewer-system upgrades.

"This is an equity issue for people who have not been receiving the same level of service as other ratepayers," he said. "Communities are getting to the point where they are just sick and tired of it."

The city is planning to consider the upgrades during the next capital budget process, which is scheduled for next fall.

In the interim, councillors have asked administration for a report on other possible steps.

Edmontonians can look forward to warm September, normal fall

Long weekend.
Forecast calls for low- to mid-20s through to next week

HEATHER MCINTYRE

Fall isn't in full swing, but cooler temperatures are beginning to visit Edmonton.

And, according to The Weather Network, the next three months should produce near-normal conditions in the Capital Region and Central Alberta.

The network's 2013 fall outlook released Tuesday suggests that "most of the Prairie Provinces should expect near-normal fall temperatures, with stretches of above-normal temperatures more likely in September."

"It's kind of hard to say what is normal because it is a transition season," meteorologist Gina Ressler said. "You know the weather is going to come with ups and downs."

Average daytime highs in fall for Edmonton are in the high teens, and the forecast for the rest of this week and the long weekend are above that — and will likely remain that way for the first part of September.

It's a way for summer to make up for lost time heading into the fall, Ressler said, adding a more noticeable drop in temperature will be noticed heading into October.

"Even just looking back

Welcome transition

to the summer, looking at your average daytime highs around Edmonton, it actually came in around normal," Ressler said. "Even though it was a cooler June, you made up for it into August."

"So we're kind of expecting these types of conditions to continue into fall with these ups and downs, but just kind of averaging out to around near normal values."

But the projected warm end to August and start to September will likely be welcome.

"I know a lot of people across Canada weren't all that happy with summer," Ressler said. "You can get some really beautiful weather in September, so hopefully that will make some people happy."

Superstore strife

Loblaw workers vote to strike

Edmonton-area Superstore employees voted 97 per cent in favour of striking last week.

United Food Commercial Workers Local #401 (UFCW 401), the union that represents more than 8,500 Albertan Superstore employees, held the strike vote last week after talks broke down. The union says its members are tired of the treatment they receive from Loblaw, Superstore's parent company.

"Our main concern is their cutting of employee hours," said Christine McMeckan, spokesperson for UFCW 401. "You have people struggling to do 30 hours of work in 20 or 15 hours."

Uncertainty of their hours is bothering workers, as well.

"Hours irregularity is a huge problem for me. It's just not consistent," said an Edmonton-area Superstore employee who did not wish to be named. "It's hard to budget anything if I'm not sure how many hours I'll get before my next cheque. I don't want to strike, but I will if I have to."

Loblaw has said that it doesn't want a strike, either.

"We want to assure our customers and colleagues that we are committed to focusing on reaching a deal through negotiations — not through a strike," a spokesperson for Loblaw said.

U of A. Science faculty must cut nearly $7 million

The University of Alberta's Faculty of Science must cut nearly $7 million from its operating budget in the next seven months, according to an internal memo from the dean of science to faculty.

In the memo, dated Aug. 27, Jonathan Schaeffer writes that the cuts will affect everyone in the science department.

"Nothing is sacrosanct," the memo says.

To meet the $7-million cuts, Schaeffer says it's possible that undergraduate and graduate student enrolment will decrease, course offerings will be reduced, layoffs will take place and initiatives and programs will be eliminated.

"At this point it is not productive to raise strong opposition — we have to accept financial reality and get on with the business of making difficult/painful decisions

Balancing the books

- To produce a balanced budget by the spring of 2015, the University of Alberta will make a further overall seven per cent cut from its academic side and an eight per cent cut from support services, the school's president said on Aug. 23.

- It's expected other faculties will be receiving interdepartmental correspondences from deans regarding budget cuts in the coming days and weeks.

... The magnitude of the cuts will force us to make difficult decisions that might appear callous," the memo says.

Appeal. Man gets new trial in 2008 Ibrahim killing

A man convicted in a shooting that left one man dead and another person injured will get a new trial.

The Alberta Court of Appeal ordered the new trial for Alexander Edward Reid, but upheld the conviction of his co-accused, Adam Michael Brown. The pair were convicted in the shooting outside the River Cree Casino in 2008 that killed Mohamed Ibrahim.

The three judges found the trial judge had not considered the defence's theory of another shooter.

"Nowhere in his reasons did the trial judge even advert to this theory much less respond to and deal with it," the panel wrote in their decision.

The defence believed two security guards had testified about another possible shooter and the appeal judges said that wasn't considered.

"The trial judge dismissed their testimony in a very summary fashion," METRO

Transparency. Trudeau says folks are stoked that he openly spoke of toke

Justin Trudeau says he's received "almost universal" praise for admitting he smoked marijuana after becoming a member of Parliament.

And that certainly seemed to be the case Tuesday as the Liberal leader did a spot of mainstreeting in downtown Charlottetown.

Young and old seemed giddy at the prospect of meeting him. They sought his autograph or to have their picture taken; several spontaneously thanked him, as one middle-aged woman put it, "for telling the truth, Justin, no matter what."

"The conversations I've had with Canadians have almost Poor refrigeration of bacon jam likely caused poisoning

An outbreak of food poisoning at the Canadian National Exhibition has been traced to the maple bacon jam topping on the cronut burger.

The likely cause of contamination was poor refrigeration, said Dr. Lisa Berger of Toronto Public Health.

"There were temperature-control issues both at the supplier and on site," she said. "The staphylococcus aureus toxin is not killed by cooking. Refrigeration prevents the bacteria from multiplying."

Al Capone in Sask.?

Great-niece of infamous gangster comes north for new documentary

ALYSSA MCDONALD
Metro in Regina

Feeding off swirling rumours and passed-down stories about Chicago gangster Al Capone's bootleg operation in the Canadian Prairies, a Saskatchewan documentary film crew is going deep — literally — to search for proof behind the prohibition tale.

The documentary, titled Finding Al, involves historical data and assorted tales surrounding the iconic mobster's rumoured appearances in and around Moose Jaw, Sask., in the 1920s.

"I've been to the Tunnels (of Moose Jaw) many times and I just wanted to investigate it," director and producer Kelly-Anne Riess told Metro in Moose Jaw — nicknamed Little Chicago by some — on Tuesday, referring to passageways below the city's downtown streets. The tunnels were turned into a tourist attraction in 2000 with Capone-themed tours and costumed characters.

Deirdre Capone, 73, centre, is filmed in the Tunnels of Moose Jaw for a documentary, Finding Al, about her great-uncle.

ALYSSA MCDONALD/METRO IN REGINA

Because of extremely limited paper documentation, Riess has focused on accounts passed down the generations.

Riess had planned to visit Capone's great-niece Deirdre, who has written a book about her family story. But the 73-year-old ended up coming to Saskatchewan from her Florida home to be featured in the documentary.

"There is no one else that can tell the story," Deirdre Capone said after taking a guided tour of the Tunnels.

"He was a mobster, but not a monster."

Capone didn't let on to her relation to the infamous crime figure during the tour, even whispering to a Metro reporter, "I wonder what these people would say if they knew who I was."

Riess pointed out that her favourite Saskatchewan story on Capone comes from a Weyburn-area home, where Deirdre's great-uncle would allegedly host firearm-filled parties once a year for his men and local farmers.

"I just like the idea of bootlegging mobster farmers," Riess said.

No plan to recall Parliament. Baird talks Syria with opposition Foreign Affairs Minister John Baird is talking to opposition leaders about the developing crisis surrounding Syria. But the department says calls to recall Parliament to discuss military action are premature.

Baird spoke first to Tom Mulcair, whose spokesman, George Smith, said the NDP Leader "was very clear with Minister Baird that Parliament would have to be recalled if there was any direct military involvement. Mr. Mulcair also stressed the importance of working with the United Nations."

Liberal Leader Justin Trudeau said Canada needs to proceed cautiously. "As soon as we talk about military intervention, there are many, many questions unanswered. Like

Division in the ranks. UN mandate needed for action against Syria, Italy says

Any military strike against Syria must be authorized by the UN Security Council, Italy insisted on Tuesday.

Briefing Parliament, Foreign Minister Emma Bonino called Syria's alleged chemical attack a "war crime" but said her government wouldn't support military action without UN Security Council authorization.

"Italy would not actively take in any military action ...

beyond the context of the Security Council, which for us is and remains the only point of legal reference that cannot be ignored," Bonino said.

Italy offered both military bases on its territory and its own aircraft for the 2011 NATO campaign in Libya. Bonino didn't specify how Italy might view base use during any intervention against Syria led by allies. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Officials prepare legal justification for military intervention

The Obama administration tried to bolster its case on Tuesday for military action against Syria within days, with intelligence agencies preparing to release intercepted communications aimed at proving Bashar Assad perpetrated a large-scale chemical attack on civilians.

The U.S. was unlikely to act before Thursday, when British Prime Minister David Cameron will convene an emergency meeting of Parliament during which MPs are expected to vote on a motion clearing the way for an armed response.

President Barack Obama and Cameron conferred on response plans on Tuesday, their second known conversation.

U.S. officials argued that Assad's actions posed a direct threat to national security, providing Obama with a possible legal justification for launching a strike without consent from the United Nations or Congress. However, officials did not detail how the U.S. was directly threatened by an attack contained within Syria's borders.

'We are ready to go'

Military forces are poised to strike Syria immediately if the commander-in-chief gives the order, Defense Secretary Chuck Hagel said on Tuesday.

The Navy has four destroyers in the eastern Mediterranean within range of targets inside Syria and also has warplanes in the region.

Wrong twin. Dating site apologizes for using image of dead president

A Scandinavian dating site has apologized for mistakenly using the image of Poland's late president Lech Kaczynski on billboards in Warsaw advocating romance for people in relationships.

Sigurd Vedal, head of the Victoria Milan site, said on Tuesday that the campaign was to be humorous and use the image of former prime minister Jaroslaw Kaczynski, a bachelor known to be fond of cats, and a cat's image.

It uses the phrase "lacking a claw," something without energy, to refer to a stagnant relationship.

The billboards put up Monday drew complaints from Internet surfers and media because they featured Kaczynski's identical twin, the late president Lech Kaczynski, who was killed in a plane crash in Russia in 2010.

The twins are "very similar," Vedal said, explaining the mistake. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Sharing cultural ties and advice helps foreign students succeed

When international student Jessica Li arrived from China to study commerce at the University of British Columbia, she felt at ease in her peaceful new environment. "I guess I can adapt quickly, since I transferred schools three times when I was a child, and I studied alone in England at age 11," reflects Jessica, who readily settled into Canadian student life.

But Jessica does recall one decision she wished she made differently during her first days in Canada: "I thought that any nearby bank would do, so I opened an account without shopping around." She realized her error later, when she applied for a secured credit card at her bank and waited two months before discovering they had lost her security deposit.

Disappointed by that experience, Jessica turned to Scotiabank® and its on-campus UBC Branch, where she was impressed by their advice-based approach to students, including the service offered by Henry Yeh, a Senior Personal Banking Officer. "We talked like friends, since we shared an Asian background and he didn't pressure me with products," says Jessica, describing their half English/half Chinese conversation.

Henry took time to describe the Scotiabank StartRight® Program¹ for International Students, which includes worry-free banking solutions for persons studying in Canada. For Jessica, the Student Banking Advantage® Plan² with unlimited debit transactions, and a Scotia® U.S. Dollar Daily Interest Account³ were appealing, as well as a unsecured credit card⁴, especially after her long wait at her previous bank. Jessica now knows that international students can actually apply for a Canadian account in China through partner banks, China Everbright Bank, Bank of Xi'an, or through select Scotiabank branches in India and Mexico before coming to Canada, to simplify the arrival process.

With her finances in order, Jessica tackled her next challenge: helping local international students, as well Canadian-born Chinese students, leverage their studies to build trans-Pacific career opportunities. As a solution, she co-founded a campus BizChina Club to help students network and meet business leaders on both continents.

After three years in Canada, Jessica has solid advice for others: "International students should get involved in more campus activities. That means exploring the different clubs and finding which ones interest you and could help you later." She offers the same counsel regarding banks, adding that, "I didn't compare banks, but you should do your research into the kind of service they offer and pay attention to how they communicate with you."

By finding friends and allies in Canada – including her banker – who share cultural links, and a willingness to support each other, Jessica is optimistic about the future: "You can take charge and create your own connections to help build your future in Canada, China or anywhere you go."

THIS ADVERTORIAL IS PREPARED BY SCOTIABANK.

Jessica Li balances Canadian studies with Chinese traditions, with the support of Scotiabank advisors who share her Asian roots.

Standing on the shoulders of giants

"He stands on the shoulders of Martin Luther King, and the sacrifices that King made that make a President Obama possible are deeply humbling to him."

Barack Obama was two years old and growing up in Hawaii when Martin Luther King Jr., the American civil rights leader, delivered his "I Have a Dream" speech from the steps of the Lincoln Memorial in Washington. Fifty years later, the nation's first black president will stand as the most high-profile example of the racial progress King espoused, delivering remarks Wednesday at a nationwide commemoration of the 1963 demonstration for jobs, economic justice and racial equality.

Obama believes his success in attaining the nation's highest political office is a testament to the dedication of King and others, and that he would not be the current White House occupant if it were not for their willingness to persevere through repeated imprisonments, bomb threats and blasts from billy clubs and fire hoses.

In tribute, Obama keeps a bust of King in the Oval Office and a framed copy of the program from that historic day when 250,000 people gathered for the March on Washington for Jobs and Freedom.

King was assassinated in April 1968 outside of a hotel room in Memphis, Tenn.

The "Let Freedom Ring" commemoration is scheduled to run from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. Bell-ringing commemorations are also planned across the country. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Washington lobbying for 2024 Summer Olympics

Washington is making a push to host the 2024 Olympics.

DC 2024 president Bob Sweeney announced Tuesday the formation of a non-profit group aimed at making Washington the first American city to host the Summer Games since Atlanta in 1996, and the first to host an Olympics since the Winter Games were held in Salt Lake City in 2002.

"We are the safest and most secure city in the world," Sweeney said. "The largest expense of any Olympic Games is security, and the fact that we've got it pretty built in to our everyday life here in Washington, we would leverage that asset tremendously."

Chelsea Manning. Gender switch announcement not an attention grab: Lawyer

Soldier Chelsea Manning, previously known as Bradley Manning, decided to announce that she wanted to live as a woman the day after her sentencing for a massive leak of U.S. secrets because a military prison said publicly it would not provide hormone treatment, her attorney said.

Attorney David Coombs said that Manning had known for a long time she would make such a statement, but "she wanted, essentially, for the media surrounding the trial to dissipate."

Manning did not want people to think the statement was insincere. "People might think it was an effort to get further attention," Coombs said.

Manning was sentenced last week to 35 years in prison for leaking thousands of pages of classified military and diplomatic material to WikiLeaks.

Cops defend not announcing sex workers' deaths sooner

The RCMP are defending the decision not to issue a warning earlier in a case in which two sex trade workers were

Officer released dramatic photos because of anger over Rolling Stone cover

New photos show the Boston Marathon bombing suspect, his face bloodied, climbing out of a boat in a suburban backyard as heavily armed police officers wait for him to drop to the ground.

The images were among those a state officer provided last month to Boston Magazine, which published some then and more on Tuesday.

Sgt. Sean Murphy took photos the April night police cornered Dzhokhar Tsarnaev in a dry-docked boat in Watertown, just outside Boston. He wasn't authorized to release the photos but said he was angry about a Rolling Stone magazine cover he felt glamorized Tsarnaev.

Shot through face

The surgeon who treated Tsarnaev after his capture said he had been shot through the face and had a fractured skull, among other injuries.

The new photos include more shots of Tsarnaev coming out of the boat, his head bloody and a red laser trained on his head. They also show him dropping to the ground, where officers and medical personnel rushed to treat him. Other photos show tense federal, state and local police officials meeting in a command centre and elite police teams gathering in the streets earlier in the day.

Tsarnaev has pleaded not guilty to charges in the bombing, which killed three people and injured more than 260 others. His older brother was killed following a gun battle with police. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The move follows the U.S. Supreme Court decision in June to overturn a 1996 law that denied federal benefits to legally married same-sex couples.

Trade talks. U.S. proposal won't affect anti-smoking laws in Canada, Ottawa says

The Canadian government says it sees no specific threat in a controversial U.S. proposal to include tobacco in the TransPacific Partnership trade negotiations that health advocates argue will make it more difficult to enforce anti-smoking campaigns.

A spokesman for Trade Minister Ed Fast says the government is still reviewing the proposal, along with another Malaysia tabled Tuesday that would carve out tobacco from the TPP altogether, but said it does not believe there will be any impact on Canada's anti-smoking regulations.

"Canada's ability to regulate in the public interest, including health, remains unchanged in the U.S. proposal," said Rudy Husny, press secretary to the trade minister, who last week was in Bru-

Online privacy. Firm is latest tech company to release stats on how often governments seek customer information

The Canadian government demanded Facebook turn over information on 219 users in the first half of the year, the company said Tuesday in releasing global data.

They were among about 38,000 Facebook users whose data was scrutinized by authorities in 74 countries, Facebook said. About half of those orders came from the United States.

Facebook said it turned over some data to authorities in 44 per cent of the Canadian cases, and that it was required by law to do so. The company declined to give any specific details.

The social-networking giant is the latest technology firm to release figures on how often governments seek information about its customers. Microsoft and Google have done the same.

"The vast majority of these requests relate to criminal cases, such as robberies or kidnappings," Facebook said on its blog. "In many of these cases, these government requests seek basic subscriber information, such as name and length of service. Other requests may also seek IP address logs or actual account content."

CAN AFFLECK BE THE WORST BATMAN?

Are you ready to have some fun?

Are you ready to play the Batman game?

Granted, this is probably only fun for people who have yet to get beyond the mental age of 12, but that's almost everybody. The rest of you, get over yourselves.

The Batman game is easy to play, of course: In the history of Batman stretching back to 1943, who has been the best — and the worst — Batman?

It's time to play the game again, because now that The Dark Knight's Christian Bale has moved on to Shakespeare or whatever, Ben Affleck has been announced as his replacement, causing thousands of bat fans to fall screeching from the sky.

Even though Ben has restored his reputation with an Oscar for Argo, the stench from the "Bennifer" era and his participation in Gigli, often cited as the worst movie ever, lingers.

JUST SAYIN'

Paul Sullivan

metronews.ca

There's even a petition on the White House website demanding that the president intervene and prevent 'Batfleck' from spoiling Batman.

Many fans believe Bale redeemed Batman from weak portrayals by otherwise decent actors such as George Clooney and indecent actors such as Val Kilmer, and they don't want to see another lame flying mammal re-infest the bat cave.

OK, if Clooney, the world's most admired movie star, failed to own the belfry, what does Batfleck expect? It's a dangerous job, fighting crime in Gotham City for $15 million an episode.

When you play the game, you probably start during the era when you first encountered the Caped Crusader. For me, that would be back in the '60s, and the inane Batman TV series of 1966-68 starring Adam West. Of course, it was supposed to be inane, or "camp," I believe it was called then, when inane was cool.

I never bought that.

Then, in the late '80s, Tim Burton made Beetlejuice star Michael Keaton his Batman, generating the same kind of horror now gripping the streets of Gotham and other locales over Batfleck. But Keaton turned out to be really good; so good, he rivals Bale as a fan favourite, especially for those who were alive in the '80s.

For the most part, people seem to prefer the intense, brooding Batguys to the Bat-light Clooneys or Kilmers.

Even Clooney himself thinks he stunk up the cave: "With hindsight," he said "it's easy to look back at this and go 'Woah, that was really s--t and I was really bad in it.'"

Of course, if you're really serious about this stuff, you can spread your wings and get into a variation on a theme: the Batman nemesis game. For example, who's the best Penguin, Burgess Meredith or Danny DeVito? Or how about the best Joker? Jack Nicholson or Heath Ledger?

If we can keep this going, we'll never have to grow up. Batman forever!

Fun after curfew? Don't count on it

Egyptians break curfew by playing soccer during the nighttime in the Garden City neighbourhood of Cairo.

In every corner of the Egyptian capital, a bustling city of 18 million that rarely sleeps, people are locked up in their homes at night under a military-imposed curfew that has driven people up the walls, sometimes literally.

To kill time, one said he spent the night counting flowers on his wallpaper — a staggering 865. Another tested how many cucumbers he can fit in a refrigerator drawer. A third calculated the speed of an ant crawling on his balcony rail.

The curfew has been a shock to Cairo, a city where cafes stay packed into the night and parents routinely take their children out for dinners nearing midnight.

The military-backed government's curfew, after violent unrest following the July 3 coup that ousted President Mohammed Morsi, slashed the typical Cairo 24-hour life to just 11 hours. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

RE: Talking About Sex? Gasp!
Published Aug. 21

I thought it was a really interesting and apt point made by the author that children and teens are exposed, without question, to huge amounts of violence, and yet are sheltered from any open, honest, and fact- or experience-based discussion of sex and sexuality.

Due to the inadequacy of sex education in schools, and many parents' squeamishness about discussing the topic, teens are left to educate themselves and each other about sex — getting their (mis)information from urban myths, chat rooms, and reality television. Talking to one's child about sex can be difficult, so parents should be glad there is this type of self-guided, science-based exhibition to help teach their children/teens about healthy sexuality.

The "self-appointed guardians of the public morality" are kidding themselves by thinking that this exhibit (or any open discussions about sex) will newly expose teens to "the discovery of attraction, seduction, desire, and intimacy."

So what is it about sex? Unfortunately, our society still operates on a puritanical value system, that not only turns a blind eye to the realities of youth and sex, but which also paints sex and sexuality as something that is shameful and should not be spoken about.

A curious idea and its interesting conversation

Ironside. Actor responds to criticism over being cast as detective in a wheelchair

When it came time to prepare for his role as the wheelchair-bound detective in Global's reboot of the television classic Ironside, Blair Underwood turned to his mother for advice.

"I spent a lot of time talking to her about her experiences," Underwood said about his mother, who has multiple sclerosis and uses a wheelchair.

"It was very important that we as professionals ... me as an actor, are really respectful and authentic as we can be to this disability that this character has."

The fact Underwood's character uses a wheelchair is about as far as this reboot of the TV classic goes in trying to emulate Raymond Burr's show, which aired from 1967 to 1975.

"It was a very curious idea; I was a little taken aback," admitted Underwood about being asked to join the cast.

"But then I thought, I liked the old Ironside. The only elements we took are his name, Ironside, the fact that he is a detective, the fact he is in a wheelchair."

Airing Wednesdays starting Oct. 2, the series picks up two years after Underwood's character, Robert Ironside, is paralyzed by a gun shot while investigating a case.

"He is very much trying to reconcile this new version of himself," Underwood says of his character, whose story is told in flashbacks throughout the series.

Still, Underwood's casting in the series hasn't been without controversy.

Some have criticized the casting as offensive because, instead of hiring an actor who uses a wheelchair, they went with an able-bodied actor instead.

"I think it is great that it has brought the conversation forward," said Underwood. "It's a conversation that I get,

I respect it, and what I derive from that, from speaking to one particular actor who is disabled, is their frustration. Because actors who are disabled, from what I understand, are often not thought of in terms of casting. Producers don't think to cast a disabled actor." METRO

Blacklist. New series may resemble real life and movies, but there's plenty that's original

NED EHRBAR
Metro World News in Hollywood

In his new series, The Blacklist, James Spader may play a notorious criminal who has long been one of the FBI's most wanted and on the lam for years, but he really wishes people would stop comparing the character to recently convicted gangster Whitey Bulger.

"I want to put that to rest right now," Spader insists. "What was inspired by Whitey Bulger was just the fact that Whitey Bulger was on the FBI Most Wanted List for decades — I don't know how long, but 16 or 17 years; an enormous amount of time. Nobody knew where he was; nobody knew what he was up to, and then all of a sudden, boom, he's found. That was the only correlation."

Spader seems especially keen to clarify that his character in The Blacklist, the enigmatic Raymond Reddington, and a criminal like Bulger are very, very different.

"Whitey Bulger and Raymond Reddington do not relate to each other in any way, shape or form," he says.

"Whitey Bulger, as we all know from the front page of the New York Times every day, was a very powerful crime figure in South Boston. Raymond Reddington's background is very different. He worked in military intelligence, then worked for the NSA and then became a truly international criminal. So the correlation really stops after just the fact that somebody that was on the Most Wanted list for so many years and was invisible all of a sudden resurfaces."

And while we're discouraging comparisons, Spader would also appreciate it if viewers wouldn't draw links to Silence of the Lambs, even if the first episode of The Blacklist finds Spader's Reddington meeting FBI agent Elizabeth Keen (Megan Boone) in a similar fashion.

"Listen, there's no question that you see anybody who's in that containment that you see Raymond Reddington in at the very beginning — very dramatic and stylized containment — it brings up images that you've experienced in pop culture in the past," he says.

"So obviously the correlation seems right there, but Reddington's a very different person. He's not a serial killer in any way, shape or form. He's an operative and a businessman, and his business is crime."

Muscle car is the real star of Getaway

IN FOCUS
Richard Crouse
scene@metronews.ca

Ethan Hawke and Selena Gomez are the stars of Getaway, a new action adventure film from Toronto-born director Courtney Solomon, but the scene-stealer is the Ford Shelby GT500 Super Snake, built by legendary car customizer Shelby American.

"Since Getaway takes place in a foreign country," said Solomon, "I felt strongly that we needed the quintessential American muscle car with enough star power to shine with Ethan and Selena."

Two Shelby GT500 Super Snakes were actually used to tell the story of a former race car driver who must steal the souped-up car and perform a number of duties to prevent his wife from being killed. The first can be seen in the Bulgarian-shot action scenes. The second was used during audio recording in Los Angeles.

The silver Super Snake is a sleek thing of beauty, but the most famous movie car has to be the 1963 Aston Martin DB5 used in Goldfinger. Not only was it the first and most recognized James Bond car — after the movie was released it was called "the most famous car in the world" — but it also inspired a popular Corgi car that became the biggest selling toy of 1964.

The British-made vehicle also appears in The Cannonball Run, driven by former Bond Roger Moore and in a highly stylized form as a secret agent (voiced by Michael Caine) in Pixar's Cars 2.

The first auto to have its own screen credit was

The original script didn't specify any type of car, but after filmmakers "auditioned" several Toyotas, a TVR sportscar, a Volvo, an MG and a pearl white Volkswagen Beetle, the VW was chosen because it was the only car the crew tried to reach out and pet.

Finally, who could forget Marty McFly's (Michael J. Fox) famous line, "Wait a minute. Wait a minute. Doc, uh... Are you telling me that you built a time machine... out of a DeLorean?"

Back to the Future used one of the 9,000 gull-winged DeLorean DMC-12 sport cars manufactured by the DeLorean Motor Company in Northern Ireland as a machine that propelled McFly back in time.

"Yes, the way I see it," said the machine's inventor, Dr. Emmett L. Brown (Christopher Lloyd), "if you're gonna build a time machine into a car, why not do it with some style?"

Crime/drama

Closed Circuit

Director. John Crowley

Stars. Eric Bana, Rebecca Hall, Jim Broadbent

Eric Bana and Rebecca Hall play lawyers and ex-lovers who find themselves in the crosshairs when their defence of a suspected terrorist uncovers evidence that could cause a national scandal. Closed Circuit is a thriller with few thrills. In its rush to get to the climax — which is actually twisty and turny enough to be interesting — it blasts through plot details, not giving us any reason to care about the characters. Once again Bana proves to be a handsome cipher — he's a good-looking actor but as dull as dishwater.

Miley Cyrus?

Cheyne Thomas has Miley's back with choice words for Kelly Clarkson

Miley Cyrus has been on the receiving end of plenty of criticism for her risqué MTV Video Music Awards performance with Robin Thicke, but she has at least one person in her corner: good pal Cheyne Thomas.

"Kelly Clarkson called Miley a pitchy stripper. Do you think she's mad because her past few singles flopped and she wasn't asked to perform?" Thomas posted to Twitter. "And she's fat and 30."

OUR TAKE ON THE WORLD OF CELEBRITIES

The Word

Are Rihanna and Drake rekindling?

It looks like Rihanna is spending time with old flame Drake, as the pair got in some quality time at N.Y. nightspot Sons of Essex the Friday prior to last weekend's MTV Video Music Awards, according to E! News.

"Drake came in around 10 p.m. with 10 people and had four large security guards. Rihanna came about an hour later, alone, not counting her security," a source says. "They sat in a back room, the lights were dimmed and there was sort of a barricade of tables blocking their group off."

But don't call it a rekindled romance just yet. "It seemed very casual," the source says, adding that Rihanna and Drake left a "generous" $500 tip before leaving separately.

Reunion was 'just for a minute'

Well, it's official. That two-minute 'N Sync reunion at the MTV Video Music Awards was it as far as the band getting back together, JC Chasez confirms to Ryan Seacrest during a radio interview.

"Everybody would ask us,

'When are you guys going to do something?' We did. Just for a minute, though," he says. "It was really about (Justin Timberlake) and all that he's accomplished. He wanted to acknowledge that part of his career, and so we all decided to do it."

If celebrity spotting and star gazing gets your adrenaline pumping, here are some holiday suggestions that will allow you to indulge your inner paparazzi

ON THE MOVE
Loren Christie
life@metronews.ca

1 Be a high roller

For those who want to spend the money to rub shoulders with the world's rich and famous, a great website to bookmark is millionairesconcierge.com. It can help you plan a whole range of high-end vacations and buy tickets to celebrity-heavy events, like the Oscars, the Superbowl or the Emmys. ACTRESS JENNIFER LAWRENCE ARRIVES AT THE OSCARS/GETTY IMAGES

2 Or save your pennies

For the slightly more budget-conscious, go to the tinsel towns of New York, Los Angeles or London, England. Reserve tickets in advance to the taping of your favourite late night talk show or TV sitcom to ensure some celeb face time. BE PART OF A STUDIO AUDIENCE/GETTY IMAGES

3 Celeb hot spots

If you prefer to actually vacation alongside the stars, book your holiday to celebrity favourites like Las Vegas, Telluride, Colorado or the Caribbean islands of St. Bart's or Anguilla. Anguilla's laid back vibe is particularly attractive to celebrities like Ellen and Portia, Jay-Z and Beyoncé and camera-shy Janet Jackson, who was seen wandering around the supermarket alone on a recent visit.

Travel like a star

4 TIFF brings Hollywood north

This year's Toronto International Film Festival runs from Sept. 5 to the 15 and will provide opportunities to see stars such as Meryl Streep, Hugh Jackman and Jennifer Aniston. Film festivals are a great way to include star gazing into your vacation. Celebrities are there to promote their movies and mingle, so they tend to be more open to the personal attention. Stake out the red carpets during film premieres and lie in wait over cocktails at hip locations like the Drake Hotel, the Shangri-La or the recently opened Four Seasons Hotel. ACTOR JARED LETO AT TIFF IN 2012/GETTY IMAGES

5 From sea to star

If you want more than just a quick photo opportunity, consider booking a celebrity-themed cruise. Cruise lines occasionally invite big name chefs, authors or movie stars on board and design the itineraries so people have a chance to interact with them. ISTOCK IMAGES

6 Stay in their resorts and hotels

If you want to say you spent the night with a famous friend-to-be, check in to a celebrity-owned hotel like Bono and The Edge's The Clarence in Dublin, Ireland; Abba's Benny Andersson's Hotel Rivalin in Stockholm, Sweden or Elizabeth Hurley's No. 11 Cadogan Gardens in London, England. Closer to home, bunk in at Jason Priestley's Terrace Beach Resort in Ucluelet, B.C. A MAN WALKS PAST THE CLARENCE HOTEL, OWNED BY SINGER BONO/GETTY IMAGES

You know how you love nachos but the calories will kill you? Here is a way to have all the taste and none of the guilt. That's because a black bean and veggie heavy casserole gives you the same crispy, cheesy feeling.

This is a great make ahead party dish too. Just stop before the baking step and pop it in the oven for 20 minutes before you want to serve.

Side. Prosciutto, Cantaloupe and Orecchiette Salad

A pasta salad should be easy. It should be a just-throw-the-ingredients-in-a-bowl kind of summer food that doesn't require too much messing around.

With that in mind, this salad is just that. Do a quick boil of the pasta, and throw in the veggies to blanch during the last 2 minutes. This simple trick saves you a pot to wash and an extra step.

Then add some flavour in the way of salty prosciutto and sweet melon, and you've got a classic Italian pairing turned into summer side.

Of course, because it's pasta salad, the combinations really are limitless. You can substitute any shape pasta you prefer. Switch out the prosciutto for bacon or salami, green beans for the asparagus, peaches for the cantaloupe. The great thing about pasta salad is that it's so easy to make it yours.

1. Bring pot of salted water to a boil. Add the pasta and cook according to package directions.

2. Two minutes before the pasta is finished cooking, add the asparagus. When the pasta is finished, drain immediately and mix in several ice cubes. Stand the strainer of pasta and asparagus in the sink and run cool water over them until completely cooled.

3. Meanwhile, in bowl whisk together the olive oil, vinegar and mustard. Add the cooked and cooled pasta and asparagus, the fennel, prosciutto, cantaloupe and basil. Gently stir to combine and distribute the dressing. Season with salt and pepper, then garnish with the Parmesan. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Ace of heart-to-hearts: How to know if you impressed your interviewer

I came, I saw, a contract. Don't be too perplexed as to whether you pleased the professionals

GREAVES
TalentEgg.ca

Before an interview, it's only natural to feel nervous. But post-interview is when the anxiety tends to kick in. Our mind hops on the overthinking train and doesn't look back.

The main reason this happens is because we know the decision is now out of our hands and we don't have much control over it.

You've gone through the application process and the interview.

The next thing to do is wait patiently to hear back with the decision. But the time between the interview and when you hear back can seem like an eternity.

To help with the post-interview jitters and make the wait a little quicker, read these signs to look out for during and after the interview and what they could mean for you as the interviewee.

The interview went longer than scheduled

An interview that goes longer than scheduled is always a good sign that the interviewer wants to get to know you better and is interested in the conversation.

This is a win-win situation because you get to learn more about the company and position, and you get more time to show how you will be a great asset.

They told you when you'll hear back

If the interviewer gives you a firm date as to when you'll hear back, it means that they have a timeline defined for the hiring process.

This could also mean that during the interview they made the decision (hiring you!) and just need to speak with their team to work out the details.

Even if the news isn't what you were hoping for, at least you have a concrete idea as to when you'll know the decision.

Body of work: If you noticed that the interviewer was engaged in the conversation, nodding, smiling or giving off any other positive body language hints, take this as a predictor that you're on a fast track to success. ISTOCK

You talked about topics beyond the job description

Ensuring that you answer each question during the interview effectively is the first step toward having a successful interview. An interview that exceeds expectations is one where you answer every question and then start to talk about the contributions you can make beyond the job description. If you found that this was happening in the interview, you probably left the interviewer with a positive impression.

The interviewer sells the company or position to you

If the interviewer discusses why the position you're being interviewed for is extraordinary, this means they might be trying to convince you about why being hired on would be mutually beneficial. If an interviewer knows they want to hire a candidate, they'll spend extra time explaining the advantages to you. Take this as a sign that they're very interested.

You get an office tour

If an interviewer knows that they don't plan on hiring an interviewee, they won't spend time introducing you

You felt like you fit

- I have had interviews before where I automatically thought "this is the perfect fit" or in other cases, "I'm not sure if this company/role is for me."
- If you felt as though you fit in well during the interview, chances are that the interviewer shared the same feeling. If an interviewer feels as though you had a good interview and also thinks you'll fit well with their environment, chances are you'll be on the top of their mind when making the final hiring decision.

to the team or giving you an office tour. If at the end of the interview they offer to show you around, be sure to say yes and to take it as an indication that they're interested in hiring you.

You hear that your references have been contacted

Reference-checking is time consuming. Unless you're being seriously considered, interviewers won't spend the time to do this. If you hear from your references that they have been contacted, this is a signal that they're finalizing their decision and you're a top candidate.

As a student, it's important to be aware of where your tuition money goes.

College and university can be expensive, but it's not just the courses you're paying for. There are services that can help the fitness, career, extra-curricular and social aspects of your student life.

Here are a few things you should use to your advantage while you're still in school:

Student discounts

Between tuition, books and

Credit requirement checks

- Many students don't realize the importance of keeping track of their credits. Registrar's offices have academic counsellors who specifically look after credit requirements, which determine your graduation. It's good to be aware of this as soon as possible and keep a list of your credits in mind with your academic calendar.

Tip: Make an appointment with your department's student advisor to go over your credit requirements. One course could determine your fate at graduation. It's always best to be sure.

Exercise your right to get the best value from your school bucks. ISTOCK a social life, being a student can mean a strained wallet. Student unions often provide student discounts on a number of activities such as movies, transit tickets, theme parks, sporting events and other special deals so you can go out once in awhile without worrying about spending a fortune.

Tip: Check frequently for different deals. You can visit your student union's website, stop by their office or give them a call to find out more.

Gym membership

For some, the gym is the perfect place to unwind before, after or in between studies. Gym memberships are included in many tuition packages, but students may find themselves "too busy" or claim that the gym "isn't their thing."

Exercise is an important part of keeping the body and mind healthy. If you're not into lifting weights or running on the treadmill, here are two alternatives to consider:

- Take a group class: Some gyms offer fitness classes such as yoga, zumba, pilates and cycling. There may even be some unique ones such as martial arts, aqua fitness and hip hop dance.
- Join an intramural team: Athletic councils or facilities often host intramural teams within the school. If you like to play for fun but not competitively, this is a great way to get exercise, meet new people and improve your game. Teams are usually separated by gender or, in some cases, are co-ed.

Chances are there's a soccer, basketball, volleyball or floor hockey team you can be part of.

Tip: Get a copy of the exercise schedule. Try different classes by yourself or with a friend and see which ones you like best. Mark an activity or two into your weekly schedule as you would with academic classes.

Health centre

Students spend most of their time at school and may not have time to go to the doctor. That's where the health centre comes in. Health and dental coverage are included in your tuition fees, whether you have a medical plan or not. The health centre usually covers counselling services, nutrition and blood tests.

Tip: You can opt out of health and dental services and receive a refund on the fees. Check with your university for more details.

Raonic holds serving clinic in first round of U.S. Open

Tennis. Top-ranked Canadian player slams 28 aces in straight-sets win over qualifier Milos Raonic has advanced to the second round of the U.S. Open.

The 10th-seeded player from Thornhill, Ont., defeated Italian qualifier Thomas Fabbiano 6-3, 7-6 (6), 6-3 on Tuesday.

"In general, it was a good day," Raonic said.

He will face Pablo Andujar in the second round after the Spaniard beat Thiemo de Bakker of the Netherlands 6-4, 6-4.

"He started doing well in 2011, just like me," Raonic said of Andujar. "He's very consistent. He can be aggressive, especially with his forehand, and I've got to play more aggressive than I did today."

"I've got to clean up a bit off the baseline and hopefully serve like I did today."

Raonic put on a serving display against the 179th-ranked Fabbiano, who was making his Grand Slam debut. The Italian gave only the slightest hint of trouble when he got a break back in the second set for 4-all before losing the set in a tie-breaker.

Meanwhile, Vasek Pospisil of Vernon, B.C., suffered a tough loss to Brazilian qualifier Rogério Dutra, going down 4-6, 3-6, 7-6 (9), 6-2, 7-6 (10).

- With the fifth-set tiebreaker tied 10-10, the umpire overruled a linesperson's call on Dutra's shot that was initially ruled long. That gave Dutra match point, which he then converted.

"I know he's very capable, I remember him from juniors," Raonic said of Fabbiano. "He got through quallies, so he must be playing well in that situation. I just sort of dealt with it as best I could, and I'm happy with how the result turned out."

Raonic took a 4-2 lead in the third set and sealed the victory with a series of untouchable serves.

The Canadian finished with 52 winners, including 28 aces.

"Serve helped for sure, got me through a lot of difficult situations," Raonic said. "I was struggling definitely from the baseline, but when I sort of needed it I was able to pick it up on both sides."

"I couldn't jump. I couldn't make a service movement. It's still better than yesterday."

Jerzy Janowicz, who was playing through a back injury in a 6-4, 6-4, 6-2 loss to qualifier Maximo Gonzalez.

"I'm in a good spot right now. I want to enjoy it as long as it lasts."

Roger Federer, insisting his passion for tennis is alive despite his No. 7 rank and recent high-profile losses. Federer won 6-3, 6-2, 7-5 over Grega Zemlja Tuesday.

"I like big matches on the big stadium, but the people

— it's too much crowds for myself, I think."

Petra Kvitová, who defeated Misaki Doi 6-2, 3-6, 6-1, said she prefers the calm of Wimbledon over the bustle of New York.

Sheets scores another top-offensive-player nod

Kory Sheets THE CANADIAN PRESS

CFL leading rusher Kory Sheets is the league's offensive player of the week after another impressive performance.

Sheets rushed for 139 yards and two touchdowns in Saskatchewan's 30-27 win over Edmonton on Saturday. It was the seventh time Sheets has rushed for over 130 yards in a game this season.

Sheets has rushed for 1,058 yards in eight games this year. He's on pace to break the CFL single-season rushing record of 2,065 yards, set by Montreal's Mike Pringle in 1998.

Sheets was also named the offensive player of the week in Week 3 and the offensive player of the month for July.

Defensive player of the week honours went to Hamilton's Dee Webb, who returned an interception 34 yards for a touchdown in the Tiger-Cats' 37-14 win over Winnipeg.

Montreal kick returner Tyrone Carrier took the special teams award, returning a kickoff 90 yards for a touchdown as the Alouettes beat B.C. 39-38 on a last-second field goal.

Teammate Eric Deslauriers was named top Canadian. The receiver caught four passes for 101 yards, including a 57-yard reception that set up the game-winning field goal.

Sochi Games 2014. Accomplished class' chemistry could provide gold-medal spark

The Canadian junior men's hockey team of 2005 is the gift that keeps on giving when it comes to the Olympic Games. Ten of the 47 players invited to Calgary to start preparations for the 2014 Winter Olympics won gold at the 2005 world junior hockey championships in Grand Forks, N.D. Seven of the 2005 alumni are already Olympic gold medalists, having played for their country in the 2010 Winter Games in Vancouver. Defencemen Brent Seabrook and Shea Weber and forwards Patrice Bergeron, Sidney Crosby, Ryan Getzlaf, Corey Perry and Michael Richards made up almost a third of the victorious team in Vancouver. They were joined at this week's orientation camp in Calgary by 2005 teammates Dion Phaneuf, Jeff Carter and Andrew Ladd. The 2013 Nissan Leaf

ALL PHOTOS CONTRIBUTED

Review. Norway shows the way environmentally as Leafs continue to fly off the shelves

They're clever people, the Norwegians. In Norway electric cars are flying off the shelves. Why? Because in Norway there is no sales tax or road tax to pay on EVs and in cities, including Oslo, parking and charging — via a comprehensive citywide infrastructure — is free.

Best of all you can drive in the bus lanes, improving commuting times significantly. Consequently Nissan's electric Leaf has been selling very well there.

Helped by its conventional packaging, the compromises of Leaf ownership are very few. Which is why we were testing the new Leaf in Norway, because the Leaf and the city of Oslo represent one vision of an automobile future for all of us.

This 2013 Leaf model has been improved by increasing power and range and by moving the plug-in charging unit to the front of the car, increasing boot space by 40 litres.

The car is also lighter and has improved ride thanks to a retuned chassis tweaked for European tastes. The result is that this electric car has become more comfortable, practical and fun. In fact it's more conventionally car-like, which can only

Interior

Now available in more conventional black trim instead of beige, the interior is familiar yet futuristic; a clever mix of comfort with cool blue accents and icons to remind you you're a trendsetter.

Performance

Zippy, comfortable and quiet, this kind of progress feels efficient and fun. The new Leaf feels faster than its 0 to 100 km/h time of 11.5 seconds suggests.

Design

The refinements are subtle, so the styling remains divisive and is not to everyone's taste. In other words, it's kind of funny looking.

With the charger port now at the front there is even more room in the trunk.

be a good thing.

Inside the Nissan Leaf you'll find five seats, five doors, and plenty of smart storage throughout. Plus all the high tech gadgets you would expect from a car this innovative, like Bluetooth connectivity, Nissan intelligent key with push button start, and a USB connection port for iPods and other compatible devices.

• Biggest plus

Knowing you will rarely have to deal with gas stations. Or pay for fuel for that matter. The charging speed has been halved too.

• Biggest flaw

The steering doesn't feel fantastically responsive at speed, though around town this translates into below-average manoeuvrability.

The 80 kW electric motor is under the hood.

The interior is very familiar but also futuristic.

Porsche Cayman

JUSTIN

drive@metronews.ca

Entering the 2013 model year, the Porsche Cayman has been updated and revamped from the ground up — meaning that the first-generation of the popular sports model has moved fully into used-car territory.

Both Cayman and Cayman S models were available in this generation. The 'S' indicates the presence of the larger-displacement engine and some supporting performance upgrades to the vehicle's brakes, tires and suspension. An exclusive, track-oriented Cayman R model was available towards the end of this generation, too. Feature content included, adjustable shock absorbers, automatic climate control, xenon lights, and a premium audio system.

CONTRIBUTED

Common issues

Check the transmission, avoiding any Cayman model with the manual gearbox that shifts roughly, grinds during upshifts or exhibits clutch slippage. If the model in question is automatic or PDK dual-clutch equipped, be sure there's no difficulty in moving the shift lever between its settings. If there is, the Cayman you're considering probably needs a new motor mount. Some pre-2009 Cayman models suffered a well-documented issue with failure of the engine's Intermediate Main Shaft (IMS) which could result in catastrophic engine failure. It's unclear how many units were affected—though Porsche redesigned the engine range without the troublesome IMS from 2009 and on. Inspect the Cayman's oil level and condition with the assistance of a Porsche mechanic, too. Models used in a track setting with high-grip racing tires may have suffered from oil starvation, which could damage the engine. Other important checks should include monitoring for oil smoke from the tailpipes at startup, and a check beneath the vehicle for a leaky rear main seal.

Engine

All models got a mid-mounted flat-six engine with rear-wheel drive. Displacements included 2.7, 2.9 or 3.4 litres, with output ranging between 245 and 325 horsepower. Manual or automatic / dual-clutch gearboxes were available.

What owners dislike

Tight cabin quarters for larger drivers, as well as a noisy ride and dated interior appearance were among the most common complaints.

What owners like

Styling, handling, pedigree and exclusivity were all given as key purchase considerations by Cayman owners. Other pluses include the two-trunk layout, easy entry and exit, and an 'easy to drive' character. Fuel mileage is also rated highly.

The verdict

Most Cayman owners report a worry-free driving experience — though some well-documented and serious issues mean a mechanical check-up is a must. A model from a Certified Pre Owned program is your most confident buy.

Charging ahead to keep electric vehicles going

Driving force. With the sales of electric and hybrid cars rising, buyers now need to know where to recharge

drive@metronews.ca

No matter where you are, you're probably not very far away from a gas station. You can confidently drive almost anywhere, knowing you can buy fuel when you get low. But for people with electric cars, finding a spot to recharge away from home is far more difficult, since public charging infrastructure is still in its infancy.

"It's the chicken and egg," says Teresa Di Felice, director of government and community relations for CAA South Central Ontario (SCO). "It's really in what comes first. Do we need a certain number of vehicles before there's a willingness to spend on the infrastructure, or does it need to be in place to encourage more people to purchase these vehicles?"

Since CAA SCO has an electric car, it has a charging station installed at its head office, as do a few other CAA locations. The auto club makes the station available to anyone who needs to plug in an electric vehicle.

Electric infrastructure presents an entirely new challenge for automakers. Up until now, they just sold the car while oil companies set up the refuelling stations, but they're now involved in the charging process. It's also an issue for

Take note

• Find your station. A Canada-wide list of charging stations, as well as information on electric vehicle costs and information, can be found at electricvehicles.caa.ca.

• Hybrid or fully electric? Not all plug-in cars run solely on their charge. Plug-in hybrids revert to gasoline/electric mode when the stored charge runs out, while extended-range cars use a small gas engine to generate more electricity.

governments, many of which are creating and funding programs for public installations. The challenges include where to put the stations, how to make them accessible, and who should pay for them, including the installation costs and the price of charging up. Di Felice estimates that, depending on the unit and how much wiring must be done to install it, a public charging station can run between $3,000 and $15,000.

The good news is that, just as gas pump nozzles fit every vehicle, the electric plugs are standardized throughout the industry, and all cars can charge from every station. The major issue is how long it takes. Fast-charging stations that can top up the battery in a short period are very rare, and not all vehicles are equipped for this type of high-power "refuelling."

Until quick-charge becomes more widespread, public charging stations will be most common in places where drivers stay for longer periods, such as work, stores, restaurants, or hotels. "The biggest impediment for people purchasing electric vehicles is 'range anxiety,'"

Where is your nearest charging station? CONTRIBUTED

Di Felice says, referring to the fear of running out of power. "These charging initiatives are useful for those who want to buy these vehicles."

The receiving end

An essential part of any hitch system is the ball mount, or receiver. Many people simply toss this component into the back of their pickup trucks or inside their sport utes' stowage compartment, where it often gets lost or left behind somewhere. Worse is that it crashes around the cabin when driving. The Receiver Caddy from Du-Ha Inc. is designed to securely hold up to two standard-size ball mounts. Constructed of heavy-duty aluminum, the Caddy attaches to an appropriate spot inside your vehicle (it has drain holes for pickup installations) without drilling. Once in place, the receiver(s) can be safeguarded with an optional key lock. The Receiver Caddy itself sells for $35 US, while adding the lock kit costs an extra 15 bucks. You can obtain the necessary ordering information and watch the instructional video at receivercaddy.com.

Buy a bodyguard

People place (or misplace) their trust in jack stands, wooden blocks or other items to prop up their vehicles while working beneath them. The Bodyguard from Creepeex features a built-in protective framework that has been designed to provide an extra measure of safety if the vehicle somehow falls. In fact, the company claims that the Bodyguard can support up to 30,000 pounds (13,600 kilograms). As well, the product's design means you won't have to lift your vehicle any higher than you normally would when using a regular creeper. Each unit includes three heavy-duty 15-centimetre locking casters and an ergonomic four-position backrest with lumbar support. The Bodyguard sells for $500 US and is available in a variety of colours directly from the manufacturer at creepeex.com.

Vested interest

If you're planning a road trip, this item is for you. Travelling usually requires carrying lots of stuff, including your cellphone, iPad-type tablet, sunglasses, passport, water bottle and so on. Scottevest literally has you covered with a unique sleeveless Travel Vest. It has 22 built-in (and mostly hidden) pockets that keep all your travel gear organized and always close at hand. And the slim design means you won't look at all overstuffed. The vest is made of wrinkle-resistant cotton/nylon blend and is both water- and stain-resistant. Colour choices include red, tan and black. The vest comes in all popular men's and women's sizes and costs $125 US. Visit scottevest.com.

Keep your cap on

How can you keep your car's interior cool during the summer while keeping ice off the windshield in the winter? Cool Cap from Reflectionite, of course. The company's products are designed to fit a wide variety of vehicles, including sedans, sports cars, sport utility vehicles, minivans and pickup trucks. Because the product securely attaches on the outside, the company claims that the Cool Cap's reflective material will significantly reduce much of the heat from entering the interior through the windows as well as the roof. Prices range from $140 to $160 US, plus an additional $10 US for a set of optional soft hooks. Get the full story and place your order at itscoolinhere.com.

Cool detectives ride bicycles ... said no one, ever

It's true. There isn't one cool detective who pedaled a bicycle to the scene of the crime. Cool cars became just as important to the image of a TV gumshoe as a fedora and long coat. And later on, what they drove became an integral part of their identity. Take Robert Urich in Vega$. First airing in 1978, he played P.I. Dan Tanna who drove his 1957 Thunderbird right up to his desk in the office. How cool was that? Well, that's just the beginning of what we have in store for you.

MALCOLM GUNN
wheelbasemedia.com

The Rockford Files

This show featured one of the best instrumental themes and one of Hollywood's most popular stars in the person of James Garner. As easy-going detective Jim Rockford, Garner drove a base Pontiac Firebird Esprit instead of a flashier, snorkel-hooded Firebird Formula or a Trans Am complete with giant "flaming-chicken" hood decal. But the understated tan-coloured Esprit was the perfect match for Garner's low-key acting style.

Hardcastle and McCormick

A retired judge (Brian Keith as Milton C. Hardcastle) and his ex-con assistant Mark "Skid" McCormick (Daniel Hugh Kelly) exacted vigilante justice upon those scofflaws who remained on the lam. McCormick clearly never understood the concept of working under cover since he drove "The Coyote," an overbaked McLaren M6 GT replica that went literally airborne during each episode's opening credits.

Columbo

The rumpled police detective (perfectly played by the late Peter Falk) drove a beat-up 1959 Peugeot 403 cabriolet that appeared to be equally trashed. Either poor old Columbo was stuck with a heavy alimony tab, or he was a terrible credit risk who couldn't qualify for a car loan to save his life.

Starsky & Hutch

Technically, Paul Michael Glaser as David Starsky and David Soul as Ken "Hutch" Hutchinson were police officers, but they looked and acted so much like private investigators that they've been included here as honorary members. What passed for their "cop car" was actually a Gran Torino — a series of 1975 and '76 models, actually — supplied by Ford that the actors nicknamed the Striped Tomato. The fans loved its outlandish paint scheme and Ford even produced 1,000 cars for the public to buy.

Burke's Law

If Columbo looked like a bum, then Los Angeles chief of detectives Amos Burke (Gene Barry) lived at the opposite end of the socio-economic scale. Burke resided in a Hollywood mansion and rode around in a chauffeured 1962 Rolls-Royce Silver Cloud II. Wonder if he was on the take?

Nash Bridges

An otherwise forgettable TV-cop drama featuring former Miami Vice star Don Johnson is notable for two things: the scene-stealing Cheech Marin (of Cheech and Chong fame) and the High Impact Yellow 1971 Hemicuda convertible. Apparently, due to the scarcity of '71 cars (all high-dollar collectors items), the producers substituted '70 models that were made up to look like the '71 models, and dressed them up to look like the Hemicuda cars. In fact, none of cars used in the series actually contained the 426 Hemi engine. Why the 'Cuda? It was at Don Johnson's insistence.

Magnum P.I.

Tom Selleck's Hawaii-based character had the mustache, the muscles and the muscle in the form of a Ferrari 308. In the show, the Ferrari belonged to Robin Masters, an unseen benefactor who would "lend" his car to Magnum to work on cases. How tough a gig could that be? Show regulars will notice that the Ferrari was replaced with newer models as the seasons wore on.

Cannon

William Conrad convincingly portrayed rotund private eye Frank Cannon who seemed to be always fighting crime from behind the wheel of a Mark-series Lincoln Continental coupe. Each season, that model year's Lincoln seemed to grow larger . . .

The Saint

Then-future 007 star Roger Moore was the epitome of English elegance in this popular crime melodrama. The smartest move Volvo ever made was to supply Moore's character, Simon Templar, with a sporty Volvo P1800 for tooling around swinging London town. This long-running series helped put both Moore and Volvo on the map.

Nissan's trucks get bitten by the zombie diesel bug

Autopilot. The Titan, accompanied by the Cummins engine, will attempt to change the company's fortunes in the light-duty market

AUTO PILOT
Mike Goetz
drive@metronews.ca

The diesels keep coming, like zombies that won't take decapitation for an answer; only with lots more torque and fuel range, and the fact that we're actually glad to see them.

This time it's Nissan, which announced last week it would offer a newly developed Cummins 5.0-litre V8 turbo-diesel in its next-generation Titan pickup.

Putting a Cummins V8 diesel into the Titan will certainly shake things up in the light-duty full-size pickup segment, where torque is highly prized and bragable. Television ads that brag about the torque ratings of full-size pickups are only slightly less testosterone fuelled than a Megadeath concert — they always make me want to put on a pair of overalls and work boots and throw heavy stuff around the living room.

Nissan sold about 3,500 Titans in Canada in 2012. Compare that to Ford, which sold over 106,000 F-Series pickups during the same year.

"Hopefully the Titan will no longer be the best kept secret," said Nissan V-P, Fred Diaz, in a statement. "We're going to be the only ones to have a V8 diesel in a 1500 truck, which is pretty neat space to play in because you're actually going to be more powerful and bigger and have more capability than a 1500 but not quite at the level of a 2500."

Diesels have always been available on 2500 and 3500 heavy-duty pickups, but the torque-endowed diesel engine makes huge sense for any truck, and we're finally getting some diesel action in our light-duty pickups.

Ram 1500 gets a diesel option for 2014 — a 3.0-litre V6 made by Chrysler's Italian partner, VM Motori — and GM is heavily rumoured to be contemplating a diesel option for its next-generation of the mid-size Chevrolet Colorado and GMC Canyon pickups. GM's already got a suitable diesel engine; it just has to North Americanize the diesel built for the Colorado sold in Thailand, Southeast Asia, Brazil and Australia.

Those markets, and Europe, have always been diesel savvy with their smaller trucks, while we've always have to look longingly over the seas for some of the action. In Europe they put diesels on everything. You can probably get a Peugeot bicycle with a diesel.

There are certainly reasons why the automakers haven't given us smaller trucks with diesels until now, but probably not good ones. The dominance of the full-size truck that can easily accommodate the big lump of a (relatively inexpensive) V8 is probably one of them. Another is our historically crappy diesel fuel, which couldn't be tolerated by global diesel engines designed to run on the better stuff.

The Cummins engine destined for the Titan will instantly make the Titan a pickup celebrity. For competitive reasons, Nissan is not yet announcing launch dates for the new Titan. But apparently engineering prototypes powered by the Cummins engine are already undergoing extensive public-highway performance and durability testing. If you see a current Titan pulling a train or something similar, it's probably testing one of those Cummins engines. Industry analysts predict the North American "light duty" pickup wars will soon be full of diesel-equipped competitors. About time...

The Nissan Titan holds the powerful engine.

Horoscopes

Aries

March 21 - April 20

As Mars moves into the dynamic sign of Leo today, your energy and confidence will surge. Yes, all things are possible but that does not mean you have to try to do it all at the same time.

Taurus

April 21 - May 21

You should make an effort to convince loved ones that you are still on their side. Why might they doubt you? Because you have been strangely uncommunicative of late.

Gemini

May 22 - June 21

Don't stop to analyze your motives: act while the passion is hot. One bold move could be all it takes today to start the ball rolling in your favour again.

Cancer

June 22 - July 23

There are major opportunities heading your way but are you in the right frame of mind to take advantage of them? Take an hour out of your busy schedule today to get your head back in the right place.

Leo

July 24 - Aug. 23

The world needs people who are willing to take a risk and with Mars moving into your sign today, it's you. Don't wait to be told to do what you feel is right — self-belief is all the permission you need.

Virgo

Aug. 24 - Sept. 23

Although the Sun and Mercury are boosting your confidence in a big way, other influences suggest you may have to be on your guard for secret enemies over the next few days. You can't be too careful.

Libra

Sept. 24 - Oct. 23

Others may be raving about a new fad but you have your doubts it is as good as they think it is. Don't be afraid to take an opposing view. Your judgment is sound.

Scorpio

Oct. 24 - Nov. 22

You seem even more ambitious than usual now and you will certainly not be inclined to settle for second best. You may have to fight it out with an equally ambitious rival but it will be a one-sided battle.

Sagittarius

Nov. 23 - Dec. 21

The next few days will see a big change in the way you look at an event. You will begin to realize that you have only part of the story and the missing parts are of huge significance.

Capricorn

Dec. 22 - Jan. 20

It may seem as if you are out of touch with the feelings of those around you but that's OK. You are who you are and don't have to act in ways that don't come naturally to you.

Aquarius

Jan. 21 - Feb. 19

You are in the middle of a creative phase and anything of an artistic nature will go well for you over the next few days. This is an especially good time to learn a new skill. What do you dream of doing?

Pisces

Feb. 20 - March 20

Tough decisions must be made and you must expect some people to be less than happy with what you decide. That's too bad. If they had acted sooner, it would not be down to you to put things right. SALLY BROMPTON
